Hi, my comments concern preservation of state and local private and publicly owned historical resources that include botanical collections, parks, museums and recognized (state or locally designated) structure of merit, historical/cultural resource, parks, cemetery or other site of significance that use water for various purposes including sanitation and irrigation. Many such sites both privately and publicly owned and maintained comprise considerable investment and maintenance for public benefit. Mandatory water conservation programs that utilize ever increasing prices for water and or arbitrary volume reduction goals will be counter productive to goals/mission of this type of California's resources.

Specificly, exempt these resources from water use reduction programs that raise the cost of water or mandatory volume reductions. I encourage voluntary programs for these properties.

Sincerely,

Scott Simpson
