Subject: low flow on the Russian River

It is already abundantly clear that the Water Board doesn't care what happens to the Russian River, nor do they have much understanding of how to restore habitat. Fish actually NEED water. Imagine that.

But really, isn't it more important that the people who don't live near the Russian River or care anything about it, have enough water for their lawns? Or that the developers have water for hundreds of new houses in an already environmentally stressed area?

If you continue to follow the politically expedient course, instead of the doing the right thing environmentally, it will all come back to haunt you. I wouldn't want to have my name attached to any of these "low flow" decisions....
