

We moved to the Pebble Beach/Carmel area recently not only for its weather and beauty but for the mind set of its residents, i.e., respect for the land where nothing is taken for granted. Preservation and conservation of resources are a large part of residents' thinking.

Infrequent flushing, short showers, recapturing runoff, plantings that are drought resistant, etc. are part of everyday life. Where have all these people gone wrong? We (the collective we) have reduced usage so drastically that now we are told to do even more.

There has to be a better alternative to what the Water Board is putting forth.

Respectfully submitted,
